

Psychobuildings Birds of Prey b/w Paradise

"Rather than invoking the chart-busting high-drama of Eurythmics' ilk mind, he opts for a dance floor dynamic that sounds like a late Eighties 'jackin'-house style remix you'd get on the B-side to a David Byrne and Robert Smith collaborative single..."

"Birds of Prey" is the debut offering from Brooklyn's Psychobuildings, a group that started as a solo recording project by Peter LaBier and has since expanded to include Peter Schuette on synths and Juan Pieczanski on electronic/live percussion and synths. Blending jam-based punk aesthetics with a laser focus on beat and melody, Psychobuildings recalls an era of music when pop, rock, and disco began fusing together to stir up new club sensations like hip-hop and new wave. These touchstones have provided LaBier with a foundation for his own unique pop sensibilities.

"In between the yelps and stream of consciousness lyrics sung over a chunky, looping beat, think of a New Wave dance-rock resurgence. Then think about how much sense it makes, and how good it actually is, and how good it would have sounded blasting out of your boom box in 1980s NYC. And then turn it up." -TYPANOGRAM

"'Paradise' picks up the trail later, taking DNA from The Cure and Talking Heads and rinsing it in a psychedelic, glo-fi surf. It does fall into the 'undeniably great' category, however, so give it a whirl. Try something new! I promise you'll love it."
-Kev Kharas (RCRD-LBL)

"Peter LaBier's deep droll steers carefully away from pastiche, around the casually out of place chimes littering 'Birds Of Prey' and into a light, lean and loopy pop jam that feels simultaneously familiar + fresh." -TRANSPARENT
